Threshold Vocabulary

2008-09

1,000 words from the General Service List that students of all ages should recognize.

Randomly sorted into 18 lists for words 1-500
And 18 lists for words 501-1000

Native English-speakers from homes with educated caretakers learn about 1,000 words a year.
That means kindergarteners begin school recognizing about 4,000 words.
English learners and children from limited-language homes
need to quickly catch up!

These 1,000 words comprise at least 75% of any written material
...at any grade level.

Many readers who struggle with comprehension can decode a word,
but since the word is not in their “receptive word banks”,
they don’t understand what they’ve sounded out.

If students recognize these words, they can devote their attention to the new vocabulary that is introduced every week in reading, math, science, and social studies —the academic vocabulary.

Each week, a teacher should find a way to work 28 of the words into the talk and interaction of the classroom. Teachers will find ways to adjust what they cover, based on what they know about their own students. Teachers will also discover quick strategies for working these words into the students’ auditory world.

Each year, the threshold words will be re-sorted into different random combinations, creating opportunities for new understandings.

Reading coaches will provide sample activities each month during the year.
These samples will be put on the website for future use.

Variations of these lists are easy to produce for teachers to print out. For newcomers, there is a list that is printed in frequency order, from 1-1000 and 1001 to 2000

While these words are essential for English learners, teachers will find that their English-only students will also benefit.

These are the threshold words, the base on which comprehension is built.
We often assume children have previously been exposed to these words.
Let’s make sure.
